APPELLANT'S SECOND REPLY BRIEF

November 7, 2005

Mail Stop Appeal Brief-Patents
Commissioner for Patents
P.O. Box 1450
Alexandria, VA 22313-1450

Dear Sir:

Appellant's Second Reply Brief under 37 CFR § 41.41 is in reply to the Examiner's (second) Answer, mailed on September 7, 2005, for the above-captioned application.

In the Examiner's (second) Answer (page 3, first paragraph; page 5, third paragraph; and page 6, first paragraph), the Examiner discusses that the reference, Hertz, deals with a reservation having a penalty clause. That point is dealt with in Appellant's Appeal Brief at page 14, last paragraph, through page 15, first paragraph.

In the Examiner's (second) Answer (page 3, last paragraph through page 4, first paragraph), the Examiner cites portions of the disclosure of Appellant's application and states that Appellant has not claimed "permitting a vehicle to be taken and used by a renter when there is an arrangement between parties."¹ Appellant, however, has consistently argued that Claim 1, unlike Hertz, covers an electronic rental agreement (i.e., electronic rental contract which is legally binding on the parties entering into it).

In the Examiner's (second) Answer (page 4, third paragraph), the Examiner argues that Appellant has not clearly defined "electronic rental agreement" and states, with respect to Figure 6L of the application, that Appellant has not clearly defined that the "confirmation page is the legally binding contract as argued" by the Appellant.

After the filing date of Appellant's (first) Reply Brief, on July 12, 2005 (and as amended on July 14, 2005), the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit issued an opinion relevant to the issue of claim construction. The Court stated that:

[i]mportantly, the person of ordinary skill in the art is deemed to read the claim term not only in the context of the particular claim in which the disputed term appears, but in the context of the entire patent, including the specification. ... It is the person of ordinary skill in the field of the invention through whose eyes the claims are construed. Such person is deemed to read the words used in the patent documents with an understanding of their meaning in the field, and to have knowledge of any special meaning and usage in the field. The inventor's words that are used to describe the invention—the inventor's lexicography—must be understood and interpreted by the court as they would be understood and interpreted by a person in that field of technology. Thus the court starts the decisionmaking process by reviewing the same resources as would that person, viz., the patent specification and the prosecution history.

Because the meaning of a claim term as understood by persons of skill in the art is often not immediately apparent, and because patentees frequently use terms idiosyncratically, the court looks to "those sources available to the public that show what a person of skill in the art would have understood disputed claim language to mean." ... Those sources include "the words of the claims themselves, the remainder of the specification, the prosecution history, and extrinsic evidence concerning relevant scientific principles, the meaning of technical terms, and the state of the art."

[J]udges are free to consult dictionaries and technical treatises at any time in order to better understand the underlying technology and may also rely on dictionary definitions when construing claim terms, so long as the dictionary definition does not contradict any definition found in or ascertained by a reading of the patent documents.

Phillips v. AWH Corp., 415 F.3d 1303, 1314, 1322-23, 75 U.S.P.Q.2d 1321, 1326-27, 1334 (Fed Cir. 2005).

As to the Examiner's point, Appellant has never argued that the "Confirmation" of Figure 6L is an "electronic rental agreement" (i.e., electronic rental contract which is legally binding on the parties entering into it). However, in considering the meaning of "electronic rental agreement" of Claim 1 in the context of the entire patent application, including the specification and the drawings, Appellant's specification, at page 23, lines 27-28, in connection with Figure 6L, clearly recites (emphasis added) that "[t]he web page 484 further includes a "Print" button 510 to permit the customer to print the final rental agreement." As clearly shown in Figure 6L (emphasis added), the button 510 states "print contract". Clearly, this confirms that the person of ordinary skill in the field of the invention through whose eyes (and not the Examiner's eyes) the claims are construed, would consider the term "rental agreement" to be one in the same as "contract". See, also, Appellant's (first) Reply Brief at page 3, paragraphs 1-3, which discusses page 12, line 6 and Figure 6K of the application. Hence, it is submitted that the Examiner errs by use of various dictionary definitions for the single word "agreement," which definitions contradict the above definition for "rental agreement" (i.e., contract), which is found in or ascertained by a reading of the patent application documents under the guidance of Phillips. In complete contrast, Appellant's dictionary definition confirms Appellant's claim construction in view of the patent application. Under this claim construction, which is through the eyes of the person of ordinary skill in the field of the invention, an "electronic rental agreement" is one and the same as an electronic rental contract which is legally binding on the parties entering into it.

In the Examiner's (second) Answer (page 5, first and third paragraphs; and page 6, first paragraph), the Examiner, without citation, refers to the term "agreement" in isolation rather than the recited "rental agreement" or "electronic rental agreement". This point was dealt with above, and at page 3, last paragraph of Appellant's (first) Reply Brief.

In the Examiner's (second) Answer (page 6, third paragraph), the Examiner argues, without specific citation to any portion of Hertz or Avis, that a "customer will receive a vehicle at the quoted price when they arrive to receive the vehicle." This point was clearly dealt with at the last paragraph of page 5 and the first paragraph of page 6 of Appellant's Appeal Brief.

In the Examiner's (second) Answer (page 6, last paragraph), the Examiner again argues, without specific citation to any portion of Hertz.

Similarly, the Examiner provides no citations at page 8, second paragraph. Even if what the Examiner states in the second sentence of that paragraph is true, although this is not admitted, as was discussed beginning at page 4, fourth paragraph through the penultimate paragraph of page 5 of Appellant's (first) Reply Brief, the Examiner has failed to cite a pertinent reference within the context of Appellant's Claims 1, 10, 11 and 12, taken as a whole.

Conclusion

Claims 1-18 are patentable over the prior art of record. Therefore, it is requested that the Board reverse the Examiner's rejections of Claims 1-18 and remand the application to the Examiner for the issuance of a Notice of Allowance.

Respectfully submitted,
